Q: How do I use a 'Linq-to-SQL' style T-SQL In Statement? I'm currently using a Stored Procedure to insert into a table based on the values in the form - with no code running as part of my page. I've been told by someone else that this is a Linq/Linq-to-SQL style 'In' statement - which would mean I can still use a Stored Procedure in the database. I'd like to know how this can be done. Is there a good example of this? Also the stored procedure needs to create the constraints based on other fields in the form. A: The reason for this is that the user sending the request is generally not allowed to be part of the data access strategy. If you want to stay on the Linq road, I would suggest just doing the queries directly. You can do this in SQL itself with a case expression. You can have something like this, for example: create proc my_sp_test @n1 int, @n2 int, @n3 int, @n4 int as begin declare @data table (n1 int, n2 int, n3 int, n4 int) insert into @data values (@n1, @n2, @n3, @n4) select @n1 as n1, @n2 as n2, @n3 as n3, @n4 as n4 from @data end To be more Linqish, you can use the DataContext API: class MyDataContext { public static void InsertTest(int n1, int n2, int n3, int n4) { using (MyDataContext context = new MyDataContext()) { context.Database.InsertAllOnSubmit(new MyDataClass { n1 = n1, n2 = n2,

She could no longer afford her mortgage and she soon lost her apartment in an Area 8 foreclosure The American Dream is a way of life in which hard work, commitment, and optimism lead to a better life for all of us. We ought to make this dream a reality. That is the simple conclusion to draw from a federal judge's decision this week to throw out an American Dream defendant's guilty plea — without giving much of a reason for doing so. A clause that, based on a simple misunderstanding, required victims of crimes in the federal courts to pursue their restitution claim in a separate federal court makes no sense, Judge Shira Scheindlin of the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York ruled. And the law as it currently stands is “extraordinarily vague,” Scheindlin wrote. In effect, “it obligates the defendant to negotiate with government prosecutors for less than the full amount of his own conduct,” she wrote in a decision sent to the public on Thursday. After the Sept. 11 attacks, the Bush administration used the massive cash flow from its tax-free war accounts to support the creation of a private prison system in the United States. The result is a chaotic prison system controlled by private corporations, with tens of thousands of inmates sitting in cages. This week the New York City Council voted to create a single payer system to handle the city's health care costs. The vote follows polls showing that a majority of the city's population favors a single payer. It is the first time in recent history that a majority of the city's population supports universal, single payer health care. Members of the New York City Council voted, last week, to create a plan for universal health care coverage, provided by the city itself. This week, a federal judge who used to live in the White House has ruled that President Obama did not violate the law in his decision to bail out the automakers. Lisa J. Nelson, a United States District Court judge for the District of Columbia, issued a 152-page opinion on Tuesday that the U.S. government has the right to provide federal funds to Detroit's Big Three automakers. Abortion provider Pacific Business Group on Health said it would rebrand as a for-profit corporation at a shareholder meeting on Thursday, after a long search for a new name that failed to reflect the organization
